One of the exploits of Sullivan, a pro-fessional "strong man" in London, is to lift with a rope held in his teeth a young elephant weighing over 1,800 pounds. Another is to attach a chain to a fifty-six-pound weight, and with the end of the chain in his mouth, whirl rapidly around until the chain assumes an almost horizontal line. This feat makes the spectators on the ground floor shud-der, lest a link of the chain should part or his teeth should relax their hold.

OUR CORN PROPAGANDA.

Educating Europe to Appreciate a Good Thing. New York Commercial: We have before us documents showing the efforts that have recently been making by the United States Department of Agriculproducts of our great staple Indian corn or maize. Our exportations of corn have hitherto been on the smallest scale, not above 4 per cent of our annual product. And even this limited import has not been used in Europe as food for man. It is ture to introduce more widely in Europe

the use as human food of the various fed to horses, cattle and fowls or else distilled into spirits. Against its use as a human food there has always existed in Europe a strong and inexplicable prejudice. When it is remembered over how wide an area of this country corn in its multifarious forms ranks among the necessaries of life, and even in some of its prepara-tions as a real if cheap luxury, it is hard to understand how it happens that even severe and constant want has so far failed to drive to its use people of the same race as ourselves. It will be remembered that in the days of the terrible potato famine in Ireland more than a generation ago even starvation failed to popularize among the Irish an article of food which is so highly prized throughout so broad an area in this No doubt ignorance of the proper methods of preparing corn meal for the table has had much to do with the unpopularity of this edible in Europe. It is used to some extent in Spain and France, and in Italy polenta—Anglice, mush—is a highly prized dish, though made from a grain much inferior in quality to the American article. But elsewhere in Europe it is a practically unknown article, even on the tables of the very poor.

But an effort on the part of our Agricultural department has been going forward for some time to set before Europe the advantage of acquiring a taste for this extremely abundant and nutritious zeal and intelligence have justified the wisdom of his choice. He has shown in a number of cities and countries how the various products of maize should be prepared, and by distributing these products gratis or at a nominal price dissipated somewhat of the unjust prejudice that exists against our great staple.

Just at present Mr. Murphy's most premising field of operations is in Gernauy, where a number of mills have been put in operation, and find it as much as they can do to fill orders. The plan adopted there is to mix one-third corn meal with two-thirds rye flour, whereby a great lowering of price is affected without any marked deterioration in quality. By means of this en-tering wedge the demand for corn meal is rapidly increasing in Germany.

It is bardly worth while to call attention to the importance of this movement to our farmers. If once the people of Europe could be made to see the merits of a grain whose price is often so low that it is used for fuel in the west, there would be an end to grumbling on the part of our tillers of the soil. For, according to Secretary Rusk's estimate, a rise of merely 5 cents a bushel would result in adding in one decade the startling sum of $1,000,000,000 to the value of the corn crop in this country.

Mr. Rosewater has an abiding faith in Nebraska, and knowing that if the truth could be placed before the people of the east it would correct their minds of evil impressions gained, he con-ceived the plan of placing a correspondent in the field to write up each county in the state from personal observation and interviews, and publishing it in The Sunday and Weekly Bes. SUBMARINE NAVIGATION.

Jules Verne's Dream Realized by a Detroit Inventor.

The dream of Jules Verne has been realized. A submarine boat such as he drew from his vivid imagination was given its first thorough trial in sub-marine navigation at Detroit recently. The electric battery had already been charged when three men stepped down through the conning tower and closed over the water tight cover. Inside the boat was lighted by incandescent lights. At first the boat went along the surface toward the Detroit river. Then the requisite amount of water was let into the water spaces, the lever that controlled the propellers was turned, and it began to go down. The sensation was peculiar, there being a feeling like that which comes to a novice on a toboggan slide, but this soon passed away, and there was almost a delight in the novelty. The lookout from the conning tower was interesting. The boat went slowly at first, but, soon inboat went slowly at first, but soon in-creased the speed to ten miles an hour. The boat having the same specific gravity as the water, and being constructed on lines that gave the least resistance, could go ahead, down or up as easily as a fish, being able to go faster under water than on the surface. The tests were continued at some length, and the boat was submerged several times un-der different circumstances. The experiments showed that the peculiarly constructed propellers were admirably adapted for submerging the boat and for raising it to the surface, responding instantly to the pilot's touch. It was also shown that in sinking or rising the hull was kept in a perfectly horizontal position. George C. Baker of Chicago, the inventor of this nameless submarine boat, first conceived the idea of his invention in San Francisco.

Mr. Baker constructed a small model which worked satisfactorily, and in December, 1889, he let a contract for his submarine boat to the Detroit Boat works of Detroit, Mich. The work of construction was necessarily slow, as everything was new and experimental. Sometimes months would pass without visible progress, but all this time suggestions were being made and worked upon. The chief delay was in the motive power, which had to be adapted to untried conditions. Mr. Baker came over from Chicago as often as possible to superintend the work, and finally, after nearly two years, the hull, which then contained nothing but the boiler and engines, was launched at the foot of Orleans street, Detroit, last October.

Her grandfather awkwardly but successfully prepared her for her couch, and, with an attendant, sent her to bed, while he settled himself to study. Presently he heard sobs from the childs bedroom, and, entering, asked in grandfatherly and, entering, asked in grandiatherly tones what was the matter. "Grandpa, I've forgot my prayer." "Well, never mind the prayer tonight; go to bed and go to sleep."
